EVERY BITCOIN BOTTOM HAS BEEN BELOW THIS LINE

4 cycle bottoms in 15 years, 4 times the average holder was underwater (red)

A BOTTOM IS A CONDITION, NOT A PRICE

You cannot call the bottom by staring at the price.

A bottom is not a number you guess. It is a condition. It happens when the people who own Bitcoin finally give up and sell at a loss, and the selling runs out.

So the real question is never "is this price low enough." It is "have holders actually given up yet."

There is one line that has caught that exact moment every single time. Start there.

THE WATERLINE

Every coin was bought at some price. Average them all together and you get one line.

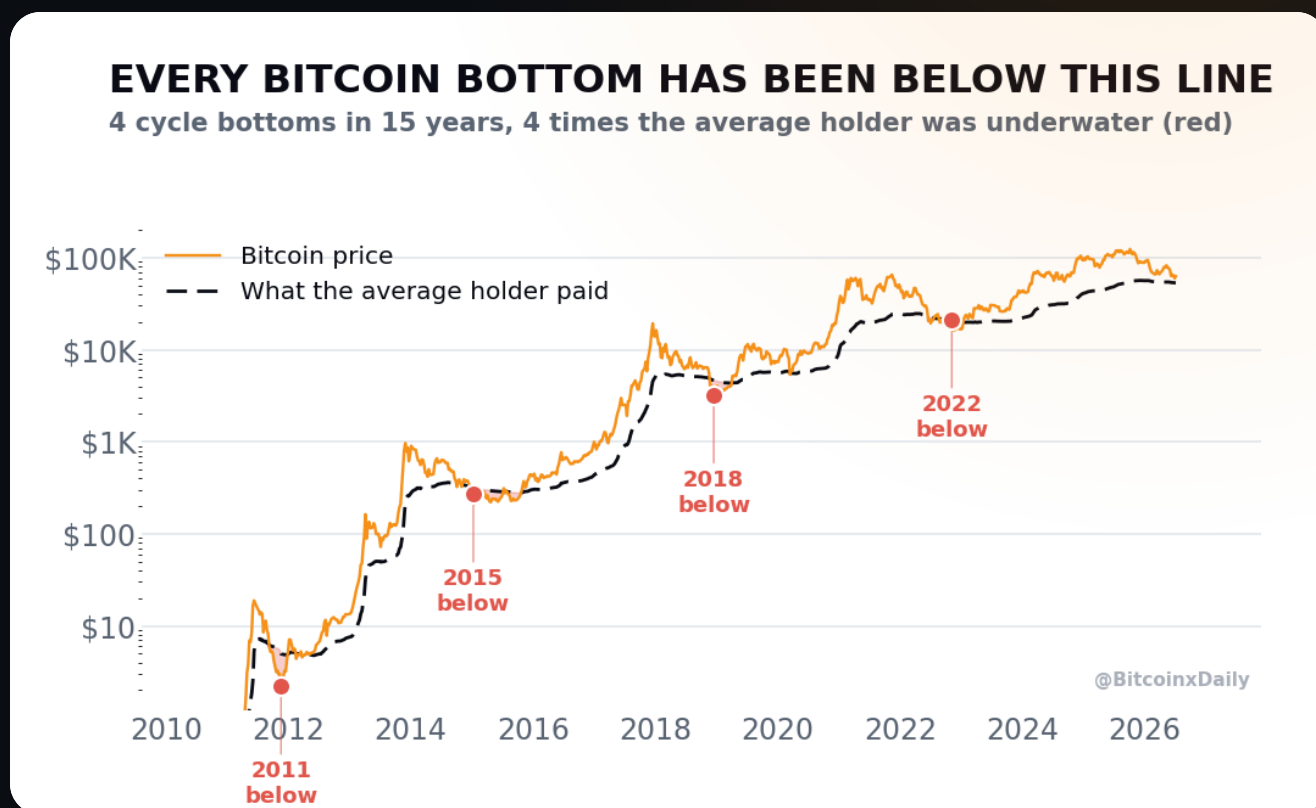

That line is the whole market's break-even. The average price everyone who owns Bitcoin actually paid.

Above it, the average holder is in profit. Below it, they are underwater, sitting in a loss.

That is the waterline. When price sinks below it, the average holder is losing money, and that is the soil real bottoms grow in.

15 YEARS, 4 FOR 4

Bitcoin has never bottomed above the waterline. Not once.

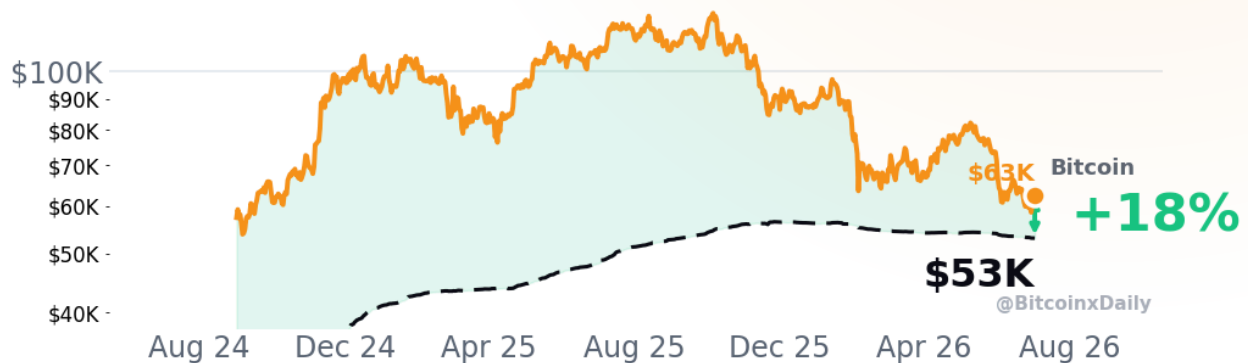

Four bottoms. 2011, 2015, 2018, 2022. Every single one happened with the average holder underwater, below the line.

The selling did not stop while people were still in profit. It stopped after they were in pain.

WHERE WE ARE RIGHT NOW

Today the waterline sits around $53,000. Bitcoin is around $63,000.

THE LINE BITCOIN HAS NEVER BOTTOMED ABOVE Bitcoin price and the line, the last two years

The average holder is about 18% in profit. That has never been the case at a bottom.

Even the recent low near $57,700 is still well above the line. The bottom people keep calling has not touched it.

So when your feed says the bottom is in, the waterline says not yet. Price has to fall under that line first.

PRICE IS HALF. THE OTHER HALF IS TIME

The waterline is the price condition. Bottoms have a time condition too.

Bitcoin moves on a roughly four-year clock. A top, a long bear, a bottom, a recovery, over and over.

And every cycle bottom has landed in a similar spot on that clock. Not random. On schedule.

This cycle, that clock points to a bottom window in the back half of 2026. So the price signal and the time signal are starting to line up.

I have published the full research on the clock, and the live read of exactly where we are in it is what I walk members through every day.

IT IS A ZONE, NOT A DAY

Here is where people get it wrong.

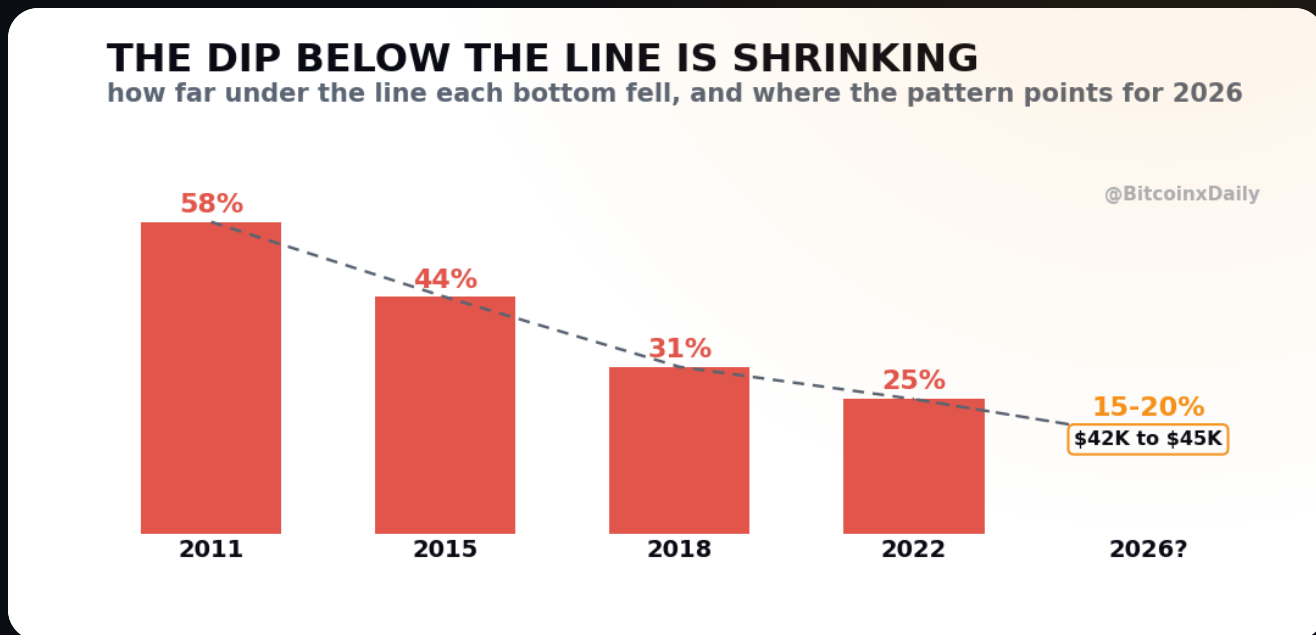

The waterline marks the area, not the exact day. Once price drops below it, it can grind down there for months before the real low.

In 2015, Bitcoin sat underwater for half a year before it bottomed.

So do not buy the instant it crosses under. Below the line means the bottom is close, not here. Patience is the edge.

THE FIRE SALES ARE SHRINKING

And the dip below the line gets smaller every cycle.

It went 58% under, then 44%, then 31%, then 25%. As Bitcoin matures, its crashes get shallower. If that shrink holds, 2026 points to about 15 to 20% under the line, a bottom zone near $42,000 to $45,000.

So do not wait for a 2018 style wipeout that may never come. The next bottom will likely just dip under the line, not crater far below it.

TWO MORE TELLS TO STACK

The waterline and the clock are the anchors. The best bottoms add two more things.

- 1 Extreme fear. The same crowd that was greedy at the top is terrified at the bottom. When everyone has given up hope, you are close.
- 2 A final flush. The real low is made of forced sellers, people who have to sell, not who want to. One last violent drop, then quiet.

When the waterline, real fear, and a final flush all line up at once, that is your zone. One signal alone can fool you. Three together rarely do.

YOUR BOTTOM CHECKLIST

Run the next "the bottom is in" claim through these four boxes.

- Is price below the waterline, the average buy-in?

- Is Bitcoin in the bottom window of its four-year clock?

- Is the crowd in real fear, not hope?

- Has there been a final panic flush?

- Are you being patient, treating it as a zone not a day?

The more boxes checked, the closer you are. No single one is enough. Right now the waterline says not yet, but the clock is getting close. When the price and the time line up, that is the zone.
